PROVIDENCE – Angelo DePeri, general manager of the Renaissance Providence Downtown Hotel wants to thank the New England Patriots for the team's great season.

"It's helped us out," he said.

DePeri's hotel is NFL headquarters this week for the AFC championship game.

League officials and network TV crews chose the location over a stay in Boston.

"With an organization such as the NFL they operate on such a high level. You need to ensure that you have the proper staff in place with the number of people that are here. You have to accommodate them in different ways," DePeri said.

The luxurious boutique hotel with a classic design and stylish bar in the shadow of the Rhode Island State House and close to Interstate 95 was a perfect fit.

The hotel's Presidential Suite is being used by league officials.

"Overall, we have a very high profile behind the scenes people. If you saw them, you would know who they are," DePeri said. "You have to make sure you have to heighten security and additional security in the hotel with them here because there's a lot going on."

NBC 10 didn't see any high profile people, and the details of the big game are being kept under tight wraps.

I hope the crews like red sauce joints, and not even good ones.
